Fund Manager's Report

The Fund rose 1.99% during the month, underperforming the benchmark by 0.22 ppt.

Benchmark 10-year US Treasury prices (UST) pared gains in January, following a steep rally in November and December 2023, as investors recalibrated their expectations for multiple rate cuts in 2024 amid stronger-than-expected US economic data. 10-year UST yields rose during the month, from 3.88% at end-December to touch 4.20% before plunging to close the month at 3.91% (m-o-m 3bps higher), fueled by renewed concerns over the health of regional US banks.

The overall fixed income market outlook for 2024 is positive, underpinned by expectations that the US Fed will cut rates as inflation declines towards its 2.0% target and economic growth slows. Meanwhile, the macroeconomic outlook in the GCC (Gulf Cooperation Council) region remains strong, anchored by stable oil prices and a robust non-oil sector. The International Monetary Fund (IMF) expects the UAE and Saudi Arabia to lead non-oil sector growth in the short-term as the GCC region in general remains strong, driven by higher domestic demand, increased gross capital inflows, and reform implementation.
